Two brothers, one a high-ranking member of a gang, are charged with second-degree murder after 23-year-old Kash Harris died of head trauma inside Peel Region's Central East Detention Centre early Saturday. Peel police said Harris became involved in a fight with two inmates in a bathroom, and then attacked them when they came out. The men suffered a variety of injuries, including a fractured skull. Both were taken to the hospital, and one was in critical condition. The other suspects, identified only as Mustafa and Ihsan, are also accused of aggravated assault. A police news release issued Monday said the brothers told investigators that when the victim went into the bathroom, he attacked them in a random and unprovoked manner. "The victims had no idea why the defendant [Harris] was attacking them," the release said. A coroner's report said Harris had suffered a fractured skull, which was likely caused by a blow to the head. The victim was charged with nine offences, including assault, dangerous conduct and breach of probation, according to police. He was already in custody on those charges, and was also being held on a previous charge of robbery with a firearm, for which he was scheduled to appear in court Monday. On Saturday night, police said the fight in the jail appeared to be a fight between the brothers and the victim. Peel police did not identify either of the victims, but a manhunt began Sunday to find Kash Harris's family. A friend of Kash Harris, Haji Mehboob, told the Star that Harris was from Brampton, and that he went to school with his younger brother. "He's a good boy," Mehboob said. "He didn't deserve to die like that." Harris's family said that Harris had been living in Brampton for about a year, and that he had come to Toronto to move in with
