Cellulose nanocrystals (CNCs) are promising materials for electrochemical energy storage, for instance, in supercapacitors. Despite the significant progress in the synthesis of CNCs and their integration into various electrochemical devices, the processing of CNCs and subsequent applications remain unresolved issues. Herein, we develop a new class of CNCs coating materials, which are made by surface functionalization of poly(diol) polyesters with α -amino- ω -amino acid (AOAA) monomer and glutamic acid (Glu). Here, the AOAA units are bio-inspired, as they are similar to those observed in the polysaccharide poly(α -amino acid), which is naturally integrated into the bacterial cell wall. The polyesters exhibit excellent dispersibility in water and are capable of forming stable cell-culture-compatible films. They are also applied in the fabrication of a 3D-CNCs/polyester-based supercapacitor, whose performance is significantly improved by the coating, as compared to the bare CNCs. The new class of polyester-based coatings enable versatile processing of CNCs in their subsequent applications.
