Health and Fitness (formerly known as Calories) is a Chrome extension that allows you to keep track of your daily calorie expenditure (in kilocalories) and body mass index (BMI) and to calculate the BMI from your weight and height. It's pretty simple really - you get to add foods and exercises to your Health and Fitness account and they'll calculate the kcalories you've burnt and the BMR based on your height and weight. This extension is designed to: Monitor your daily calorie expenditure Let you see how much weight you lose or gain, based on your daily expenditure Know if you are within a healthy range of body mass index (BMI) See how much you are eating, and help you cut back on your calorie intake Automatically calculate your BMI based on your weight and height You can try it out by installing Health and Fitness on your Chrome browser, and you can find instructions for doing so here. Disclaimer: I did not download or test this extension. I did test out the BMI calculator and the results did seem to be accurate. A: I've used Calorie Tracker before, and it worked fine for me. The only thing I noticed was that if you had multiple accounts, it had a hard time deciding which to use, so for any log entries that were already logged in another account, it would add them. That wasn't a major issue, but it did prompt me to wonder whether it was intended for multiple users (something like Google Calendar does). You also need to add foods to Calorie Tracker manually. For example, for one of my dietary entries: Cauliflower and mushrooms have a total of 567 cal. Dairy has a total of 468 cal. Frozen veggie burgers have a total of 524 cal. I'm fairly sure that your basic webapp can't be set up to save "exercise" calories separately. I know you can log movements separately, but it doesn't include any calories you burn in your exercise. There are different types of cancer that affect the prostate, such as: prostate cancer, bladder cancer, skin cancer, colon cancer, ovarian cancer, cervical cancer, rectal cancer, breast cancer, lung cancer, esophageal cancer, stomach cancer, prostate cancer, and other types of cancer. There are also drugs that treat certain types of cancers.

(Popular Alternatives is a comparison of the top online services & apps. An overview and alternative for the top online services based on popularity, cost and features.) Most of us spend a lot of time in front of a screen, whether it's on the web, on a tablet, on a phone, or even on a television. And if you're anything like us, you might also be drinking at least 1.5 liters of water per day. A water bottle is important for obvious reasons, but where and how you choose to store and carry it is another story. A tiny but powerful flashlight A personal trainer can be a good thing, but would you consider carrying it around your neck for years? Luckily, you don't need to. Since for most of us carrying around our water bottle can be pretty inconvenient, Xaypad is a small USB powered flashlight that's so small that you can carry it around your neck, and it will last for over a year on a single charge. One thing worth mentioning is that the Xaypad weighs only 88 grams, so carrying it around won't be an issue at all. A true wrist-mounted flashlight A good flashlight is extremely important to have around when venturing into remote places or camping, and you don't want it to run out of battery in the middle of the night. The Xaypad is rechargeable, and is capable of working for up to 3,000 hours on a single charge, which means you can carry it around and use it for months. Though most of us carry around our water bottle, they can be bulky, so carrying around a flashlight is pretty important. A cool little thing to have in your backpack We're not sure if this little thing will become a must-have gadget, but it's pretty cool. It's a cheapo PWM-controlled LED flashlight, and it runs on a AA battery. It doesn't have a holster, but it has a sturdy strap that can be attached to a backpack, so you can carry it around. It also has an integrated carabiner, making it easy for you to hang it from whatever you're carrying. A cool little thing to have in your backpack Xaypad can't be said to be the most powerful flashlight available. It does have an output of 5 mA, which is pretty weak, but that is what you get for only $1.19. That said, it does have a maximum runtime of 20 hours, but that's pretty good for such a little thing. A good smartphone or tablet might already have a very fancy display, but
