Many spiritual songs were based on repeating sequences of simple chords. The church was not the only place where blues music was born. In A. R. T. (in an arbor tongue) - "In the language arbor" (in harmony with nature) - this expression was also applied to folk songs. For a while, there was a so-called "language of dance" in popular music. On stage, performing their parts, the dancers spoke in "body language". In England, such dances were known as "hoot" ("storm"), and in America - "jig" ("jig"). In the mid-nineteenth century, these dances became popular in the United States, and in some circles they became known as the "language of dance".
